

What if we took conservation seriously in Nova Scotia

Brad Toms¹

¹ Mersey Tobeatic Research Institute, Kempt, NS

While conservation in Nova Scotia has had some success stories, many of the broader conservation goals, national and international commitments have remained stagnant. Our ability to recover Species at Risk has left much to be desired. This talk will envision what it might look like if we were truly trying to recover species at risk, meet our conservation goals and achieve truly sustainable seven generations approaches to resource use and conservation.

Oral presentation